At morning and at evening I seek You;
    I offer You my face and outspread palms.
For You I yearn, to You I turn, Your grace to earn,
    Like someone at my door who asks for alms.

The heavens do not have room for You to dwell,
    And yet You have a palace in my mind.
For in my heart I hide Your holy name;
    Your love spills over, it cannot be confined.

And so I praise God with my poetry,
    While yet He breathes the living soul in me.

Solomon Ibn Gabirol
